LETTER FROM THE INCOMING BOARD

Dear Rice Finance,

As we reflect on another successful year in RUIF, we are incredibly grateful for the leadership of our former President, Jonathan Woo, and Vice President, Dylan Council, as well as the dedication of our Training Program Directors, Sector Directors, and analysts across the fund. We are equally excited to welcome our newest analysts to the organization. Rice Finance was founded on the belief that a student-led organization can provide meaningful, hands-on opportunities to learn about finance, and we are excited to continue growing alongside the increasing interest in finance and business across the broader Rice community.

This past year brought several important developments across the fund as we continued expanding opportunities for students and strengthening the RUIF experience. In particular, we further solidified our two energy sectors, continued our “Teach-Ins” with members of the investment team at the Rice Management Company, and grew our Training Program to more than 100 participants each semester. These accomplishments would not have been possible without the commitment of our Sector Directors, Senior Analysts, Junior Analysts, and Training Program Directors, whose leadership and hard work continued to strengthen the organization throughout the year.

Looking ahead to this semester, we are excited to introduce three major developments to RUIF. First, we are launching New Analyst Training, a two-hour bootcamp at the beginning of each semester designed to get incoming analysts up to speed and bridge the gap between completing the Training Program and contributing as an analyst in the fund. This initiative was developed directly in response to feedback from our members and will provide new analysts with a stronger foundation before beginning sector work. Second, we are introducing Pitch Day 2, a new competition-style event in which the top three sectors of the semester will present their investment pitches to a panel of judges composed of RUIF alumni and faculty and staff from the business school. Finally, based on popular demand, we are launching an entirely new Power, Utilities, and Infrastructure sector, expanding the range of industries and investment themes available for our analysts to explore.

As a student in the Training Program three years ago, Rice Finance served as my introduction to finance at both the collegiate and professional level, as it has for many other students. During my time in the organization, I have had the opportunity to learn from incredible mentors, gain meaningful hands-on experience, and discover opportunities that I otherwise may never have encountered. It is a tremendous honor and privilege to lead the fund over the next year, and I am excited to help ensure that future generations of analysts are able to benefit from the same transformative experiences.

Thank you all for your hard work and contributions to the fund thus far. We are very excited to see you on campus again this fall and look forward to kicking off another great year for Rice Finance!

Best,

Sergio Karam

FALL 2026 PORTFOLIO REVIEW REPORT

Dear Rice Finance,

The past year has been another period of strong performance for the Fund, bringing our cumulative return over the past six years to more than 130%. Over the last twelve months alone, the Fund has outperformed its benchmark, the Vanguard Total Stock Market Index (VTI), by approximately 18%. With approximately $70,000 currently under management, the Fund enters 2026/27 from a position of continued strength.

We remain confident in our ability to generate long-term outperformance through the continued identification of new investment opportunities. At its core, our approach focuses on two types of opportunities: businesses trading at a discount to their underlying value and companies whose future operational potential is not yet fully reflected in their market valuation.

Technology remains our largest sector allocation at approximately 28% of the portfolio, driven primarily by early investments in NVIDIA, Cloudflare, Microsoft, and Micron Technology. Each has generated triple-digit returns, with NVIDIA representing the Fund's largest individual gain at approximately 4,052% since purchase. Going into 2026/27, we expect to realize a portion of these gains and gradually reduce our technology concentration. We also maintain significant communications exposure through Alphabet and Meta, which we continue to view as long-term holdings given the strength of their advertising businesses and opportunities across cloud computing and AI.

Energy & Natural Resources remains one of the Fund's core areas of investment. We continue to favor U.S. Lower 48 shale producers, including Devon Energy and ConocoPhillips, and believe further E&P consolidation will support greater capital discipline and shareholder returns. We also view the continued expansion of U.S. LNG exports as a major structural trend within the energy sector, with exposure to leading exporter Cheniere Energy and midstream and natural gas players such as Expand Energy and Energy Transfer. Looking toward late 2026 and early 2027, we believe a potential easing of conflict in the Middle East could create attractive opportunities within the oilfield services sector, particularly for Baker Hughes and Halliburton.

Consumer Goods and Industrials have both benefited from the "HALO" (High Asset, Low Obsolescence) trade that has characterized much of 2026. Within Consumer Goods, we remain bullish on the U.S. consumer and favor businesses with resilient operating models, including Walmart, Casey's General Stores, and Costco. Within Industrials, we see long-term opportunities among defense contractors as rising defense budgets support order growth into the next decade. At the same time, the market's focus on technology and AI has compressed valuations among legacy players, creating attractive opportunities in companies such as Republic Services, Waste Management, and UPS.

Within healthcare, our focus remains on established insurers, particularly UnitedHealth Group and Elevance Health. We believe their scale and diversified platforms provide attractive long-term exposure to growing U.S. healthcare spending. The Fund also maintains selective real estate investments through Invitation Homes, STAG Industrial, and VICI Properties, providing diversified access to residential, industrial, and experiential properties.

Best,
